

Changing my life—from Sydney to Hippy Nimbin.

Cherie Milford

Five years ago, I lived in Sydney. I had a good life there. I knew many friends. I enjoyed my job. I had a comfortable home. Then one day, my son asked me to visit him. He lived in a small town in New South Wales called Nimbin. I needed a holiday, so I agreed. I didn't know that my visit to Nimbin would change my life!

I knew nothing about Nimbin before I came here. However, as soon as I arrived, I knew it was different from other towns. All the buildings were painted with bright colors. Everyone seemed to know each other. It felt like a home, not a town.

I soon learned that Nimbin is known as the "Alternative Capital of Australia." People here all live together like a family—sharing their homes, their food, and their problems. People live together in peace. Nimbin even has its own money—called Nimlets. There are many artists and musicians here. They don't live in luxury, but they make enough money to live on.

I stayed a week. I liked it. Everyone was so friendly and relaxed. I stayed another week. That became six months. I left my job in Sydney. Then I sold my home and moved here. Now, Nimbin is my home!

My friends from Sydney visit sometimes. They think I am crazy! But I tell them the lifestyle is good for me. Nimbin is in a beautiful part of Australia. We try to live in a way that doesn't harm the planet. The power we use comes from the sun and the wind. We also recycle everything. We grow all the fruit and vegetables we need.

Nimbin is an example to the world. We want to show that we can live with the planet and each other, in peace. Everyone is welcome here. Many people visit Nimbin to see how we live. Some people like it so much they decide to stay—like me! We stick together like a family. People say we have a "hippy" lifestyle. I prefer to say "alternative." Not everyone wants the same things in life.
