

CHILDREN CUT OUT THE MEAT

After seeing a film about a sheep who wanted to be a dog, at age 9 and realizing the source of what was on her plate, Lauren Pierpont of Boulder decided to stop eating meat. At age 6, Nathan Kassel of Boston was given a choice by his parents between a vegetarian diet and eating meat regularly ; he has been a vegetarian for three years. School lessons about endangered species combined with a visit to the zoo persuaded Laura Gzenda, 7 of Boulder, to stop eating meat. «Every time I put a piece of meat in my mouth, I felt like the animal was talking to me.» Laura now 12, said. «it was saying «Moo, don't eat me.»»

Vegetarian diets for children have become accepted in recent years by some parents, pediatricians, nutritionists and even the well-known child care authority Dr. Benjamin Spock. In the seventh edition of Baby and Child care, published shortly after his death, in 1998, Dr. Spock recommended that a vegetarian diet begin at age 2, with fortified foods, drinks and daily vitamin and mineral supplements. He believed his own health improved after he switched to a vegetarian diet late in life.

Although Dr. Spock's push for a nearly lifelong vegetarian diet generated some controversy among his colleagues, it did not settle the matter of whether a meatless diet was ideal at any age, particularly in children and adolescents. Yet pediatricians in Colorado and elsewhere said in recent interviews that they were seeing more children and adolescents choosing a vegetarian diet.

The reasons for choosing a vegetarian diet are varied and include picky eating, animal rights and environmental activism and the desire to be «hip» within certain adolescent groups. Parents sometimes choose the diet for their children in an effort to reduce risks of certain illnesses or to adhere to religious or spiritual beliefs.

But there is some concern that fat or sugar may replace meat in some children's diets. Concern lies with those who do not get enough protein, vitamins B12 and D, iron, calcium and zinc in their diets. When children are lacking essential nutriments, they can develop malnutrition and anemia. Whether it is the choice of parents or the child not to eat meat, the consensus among nutritionists, doctors and parents that children need balanced and varied diets, whether they include meat or not.
