This letter appeared in the «Advice Column» of a famous American magazine:

Dear Annie,

My name is Ernest and i would be very grateful if you could advise me on how to solve a problem I have with my wife Linda. I can't believe what's happening. Everything has been so marvellous between us so far. When we got married five years ago, she couldn't wait to leave her job as a secretary in an office and raise a family with me. But now everything has changed.

Lately, she's driving me crazy with her new ideas of returning to school and having her own career. I don't mind if she has a career. But not now. We have a small baby. She is quite obstinate and wants to leave the baby with a babysitter. I can't accept that! A young child needs a mother's love and affection. I can't see some stranger raising my children. Linda's always complaining about her situation. She says she's bored. I know a lot of women who are happy to be home taking care of their family.

I work hard all day to earn a living so we can live comfortably. Then I have to come home and listen to her complaints. I try to help around the house and with the baby, not like most other husbands. What more can she expect? why can't she wait until we have at least another child? linda's abandoning me, the baby, our dreams, everything we wanted when we got married. If she continues like this, we'll end up by getting divorced, and that's a pity.

What solution do you suggest?

Yours

Ernest
