

The tradition of birthday parties started a long time ago. People thought that there was a special danger from evil spirits, so friends and family camp together to bring good thoughts and wishes and even presents. At one time, only kings had birthday parties but as time went by, children and then adults began to have their own birthday celebrations. There are some traditions – such as sending birthday cards, blowing out the candles on a birthday cake and singing the 'Happy Birthday' song, that you can find almost anywhere, any time. Others are more specific to certain ages ... and certain countries.

Birthday Traditions around the World

1 In China, everyone celebrates their birthday on New Year's Day: they become one year older on that day. On a child's second birthday, family members put a variety of objects on the floor around the child. According to Chinese tradition, the first object that the child picks up tells you what profession the child will choose later in life.

2, 5, 7 For Japanese children, the third, fifth 10 and seventh birthdays are particularly important. At this age, there is a special celebration called Shichi – Go – San (seven, five, three in Japanese) when children go to the temple wearing a brand-new kimono. The 15 priest gives them special sweets, and the parents usually organise a party for their friends in their home.

15 In Argentina, Mexico and several other Latin American countries, girls have a special 20 birthday celebration when they reach the age of fifteen. After a religious ceremony, the girls dance a waltz with their father and other boys.

18 Eighteen is the traditional 'coming of age' – the age where you have the right to 25 vote, join the armed forces and (in many countries), drink alcohol and (in the UK) buy a house or become a member of parliament!

21 In many English-speaking countries, a twenty-first birthday cake often has a key on 30 top, or the cake itself is sometimes in the shape of a key. The key means that the young person is now old enough to leave and enter the family home at any time they want to!

30 In the past in parts of Europe, men who 35 reached the age of thirty and were still single, had to clean the stairs of the City Hall. This way every girl could see that the man didn't have a girlfriend. – and how good he was at cleaning the house!

40, 50 After the age of thirty, many 45 people prefer to forget their birthdays rather than celebrate them ... children often bring Mum (or Dad) breakfast in bed, and it's traditional to give a bunch of flowers and enjoy a special meal or party. It's also a day when your friends and family have to pay if you go out for drinks or a meal!
